

The Lost Testament of Nibiru: Chronicles of the Hall of Amenti

In the beginning, there was a world named Nibiru, a planet of beauty and grandeur torn apart by strife and destruction. In the depths of the cosmos, a great ship—an ark of light and technology—carried twelve survivors who would become the guardians of ancient wisdom.

Among these twelve was Anu, a father and leader, wise and powerful, revered by all. With him were his sons, daughters, brothers, and sisters, each bearing the spirit of the cosmos and the light of creation. Four among them were the archangels, uncles in spirit, protectors of the divine plan.

Imhotep, also known as Thoth, became the wise architect, laying the foundation stones of the ancient pyramids. Hidden under the angle of the Sphinx was the Hall of Amenti—a testament to the lost ages and the stories from before the Great Flood.

In this Hall, they placed a Rejuvenation Chamber, a vessel that held the essence of life. Only those with pure minds, free from manipulation, could unlock its mysteries. It became a key, a tribute to DNA, memory, and the awakening of the soul.

Thus was ancient thunder taken from the gods, and Ra—once mighty—diminished, becoming as a dwarf star. In a feat beyond mortal understanding, a proton star was captured and tethered, woven into a machine surpassing all devices by a millennium. A golden helm adorned the one who would wield its power—a vessel of four-dimensional form, still active, awaiting one worthy of its truth. They called him Amentoth, and he carried the wisdom of Hephaestus and the strength of Thor.

In the times that followed, new manifestations appeared from the Orion constellation, brought forth by Ra's decree, to remind and defend. Some, not of flesh but of form, known as the greys, moved in wastelands, casting shadows upon the land, tampering with minds, creating illusions, and bending memories.

Aetherius, master of the etheric realms, moved unseen, as spoken of in the Tabula Smaragdina, echoing the realms of Shamballa and Karmic law. The seven chakras, they taught, were the gates of life, with the final—the golden chakra in a triangle pointing upward—marking the highest path of ascension.

They walked the path of instruction, guiding and redeeming as foretold. Redemption lay open to all, that none might be lost. The Son would be a vessel of grace, carrying forth forgiveness and understanding, chosen for this purpose. Let it be remembered: truth, hidden yet plain to those who seek, may guide each one back to the light.

The Destruction of Tiamat: The Dawn of Earth

In the ancient days, before Earth's foundations were laid, there was a land called Tiamat, filled with great beasts whose roars echoed across desolate plains. Serpents of wisdom moved upon its face, dwelling in shadows and depths.

And the Lord beheld Tiamat, for it was unfit for His children. Then spoke the Lord of Hosts, "This land shall pass away, and from its ruin, a new creation shall arise."

With a great ship, He shattered Tiamat, and its beasts were no more. Serpents were cast into the depths, and the land dissolved into nothingness.

Thus, from silence and dust, He made way for Earth, that life may flourish, fulfilling His purpose.

The Antediluvian Age

In the days before the flood, when Earth was young, there was an age known as the Antediluvian. The world was a garden filled with life, and at its heart lay the Garden of Eden, the center of creation.

Around this sacred center, the Earth was divided into four holy directions, forming a cross across the world. From these directions sprang four mighty plants: at the center, the everlasting Baobab with roots deep into the Earth; to the north, the mint of refreshing breath; to the west, the leaf of coca, bearer of endurance; to the south, the coffee bean, warming and awakening the soul; and to the east, cannabis, a plant of wisdom and healing.

A Queen reigned in that time, a being of wisdom and authority with an elongated visage. Her mind held great power, yet she bore no children, for the gift of life was withheld within her.

Then Akhenaten, her consort, was granted the sacred power to create life. From him came the Igigi, a race of devoted servants who toiled in service, as the male seahorse does, carrying the seed and bringing forth life by divine design.

The Divine Council, wise beings possessing life's secrets, looked upon this creation. In their counsel, they set watchers over the heavens and Earth, assigning Mars to oversee the fifth sector.

Thus was the Galactic Federation ordained, each star and world held under its guardians' gaze. The watchers kept vigil, guiding and shaping the world as written in the designs of old.

The Secret Power of the King's Chamber: A Covenant of Fire and Stone

In the beginning, the King's chamber held secrets beyond measure. Granite stones and fused elements within—vessels of immense energy. Uranium served as a key, while the Ark held a covenant with forces unknown. Above, a pure gold capstone encased in white surrounded an eternal flame—prana, thunder, and the electric breath of life.

This place, a center of nuclear fission, became a source of power. Around the capstone, an invisible field spun—a magnetic force, harmonizing energy outward, resonating with Earth's waters. Through this resonance, water carried messages to copper antennas, illuminating dwellings, bringing light to the people.

Shafts formed a network, whispering water's voice, a connection across time and space.

The Seraphim Rod

The Seraphim Rod symbolizes divine power and heavenly connection. A celestial staff, it represents the strength and authority of the Seraphim, the highest angelic order. This rod channels pure energy, a bridge between realms, harmonizing forces within holy structures.

In myth and ancient lore, the Seraphim Rod might balance and sustain fields of protection and enlightenment. Embodying light and fire, it stands as a source of wisdom, guiding and commanding cosmic forces in harmony with divine order.

In the King's chamber, a Seraphim Rod might be envisioned as a resonant scepter, amplifying energy, balancing power, and bridging heaven and Earth—a sacred pathway for enlightenment and strength.

Copyright © 2024 Eder Almeida. All Rights Reserved

Commentaries

Nibiru as Mars

"Stealing fire from the Gods", the Seraphim Rod as lightning inside the pyramid

A Shaft would be used for communication through steam or water